

44) Office of the Vice President for Research (OVPR) and Strategic Interdisciplinary Research Office (SIRO)

Equipment and Research Support Services

Beecher-Dock House, University Park Campus

Lorraine Mulfinger, 814-865-7787, lxm14@psu.edu

The Strategic Interdisciplinary Research Office (SIRO) is a research administration unit of the Office of the Vice President for Research that is organized to support both the development of proposals and the administration of large and strategic projects at Penn State. Supported projects typically involve significant efforts from multiple faculty spanning two or more colleges or institutes, and are of strategic importance to the Penn State research enterprise. Projects like these are typically quite time consuming and labor intensive to propose and manage, and SIRO is designed to support these greater needs. SIRO also provides comprehensive pre- and post-award support for multiple institutes. SIRO leadership works in consultation with faculty, department heads, deans, and research institute directors to determine the level of support necessary for each proposal or project. SIRO carefully coordinates all of its support activities with research administrators and financial officers across colleges, in Research Accounting, and the Office of Sponsored Programs.